WILKES, JUNIOR.

THE LITHGOW DISTRICT.

PORTLAND CEMENT WORKS.

SUCCESSFUL OPERATIONS.

(BY OUR SPECIAL MINING REPORTER.)

II.

Following on my visit to Lithgow, proper, a trip was made on 20th May, 1891, to the Lithgow industrial centre close by where, perhaps, the finest limestone deposits to be found in the State exist. For a good many years lime-burning and cement-making have been carried on in the district, and now, after 20 months past, there has sprung into existence the largest cement-making plant to be found in the whole of the Commonwealth. A little better known, perhaps, is the fact that the comparatively speaking only a few private houses at Portland; now quite an important village has been built, and it is still increasing rapidly. A long row of comfortable houses, with a large number, has been erected by the Commonwealth Portland Cement Company, neat churches, a Public school, and quite a number of business houses. A Government water supply is laid on to the town, and a fine railway, a main gauge railway siding put down to all parts of the cement and limestone quarries. Quite a hive of busy workers is to be seen all around, and it seems as if time goes on an important industrial centre will be the result of capital mostly from abroad.

A chat with the manager of the Commonwealth Portland cement works shows that the works have been running for about 12 months, and that the output had gradually increased, until at present it is about 500 tons cement per week. On these Commonwealth works, it appears, a prejudice against the production, but it soon became evident that its superiority over the imported cement was, no longer in doubt, and immediately a market was established, which is daily increasing, to such an extent as to leave little room for almost all. The company, besides supplying all Government contracts, public works, railways, and other Government buildings, the Trust, etc., supplies cement all over the various States, large quantities going to Queensland, Victoria, New South Wales, and the New Zealand, and some of the Pacific islands. To the latter places shipments are very regular, and the demand is increasing. Large quantities for the making of concrete water pipes for the Metropolitan Board of Works, and for the construction of the new runs into upwards of £4,700. These matters go to show that the finished product from period become popular among consumers, and there is reason to believe that a still greater demand will continue to be felt to keep pace with the growing demand. Extensive developments are taking place at the quarries near Portland, with adequate provision being made, and although up to the present there has been no difficulty in keeping up the supply of raw material, in a short while the company will be able to meet all demands on the works. Recently, I may mention, additional developments have been made in the mines, as well as new railway sidings; and the water supply, which at first promised not to be adequate, is now found to be more than now far in excess of all requirements. The company has its own collieries, which of late have been considerably developed, and in fact, for other reasons, the coal can now be landed at the works much cheaper than heretofore. At present the output of coals is about 200,000 tons a year.

In November and December of last year the large increase in sales of cement made it necessary at this time to erect a new large, or already large plant, and at the time of my visit these additions were well on the way of completion. At this time the works have additional facilities for the making of cement casks. At present all the cement sent away is bagged, and as far as the future is concerned, it is anticipated that in the future is likely to be continued. The casks are to be used for the export trade, and for the use of the Government locally, a splendid supply of which is available.

The business of cement making at Portland is a very important one, and is being carried out, so much so in fact that the owners confidently expect that it will become in the near future one of the country's leading industries. At present the company employs about 200 hands, but it is anticipated that in the near future the number will be increased to about 300 over a quarter of a million pounds, and with the further additions a much greater number of hands. At the works I was shown a sample of the cement, composed of imported cement, and of the cement produced at these works, and the differences in quality were quite evident.

Commonwealth Portland Cement.

There is one thing certain, and that is that the Portland Cement works of the company at Portland, the place has been transformed from a wild bush into a prosperous and fast-growing town, and the place is now the home of a number of large families, who have in many instances their own people depending upon them, and a good one, too—and it is gratifying to find that quite a number of young Australians have been educated at the works, and in which there are many branches. Besides cement, Portland sends away raw lime in large quantities, and also has a large quarry at Dapto, Cockle Creek, and to metropolitan areas, as well as a very large quantity of sand.

has been established at Portland, and as a revenue-making place there are few to beat it. It is expected that the city will be able to pay a great deal more than interest from the day it was opened, and possibly make the conclusion a paying instead of a non-paying one.

FEDERAL CAPITAL QUESTION.

SIR JOHN FORREST'S POSITION.

▲ FURTHER MINUTE.

EARLY SELECTION URGED.

Sir John Forrest explained yesterday his present relation to the Federal Capital sites question. It should be remembered that, having before vacating office as Home Minister, Sir John visited the Yamat and Bombara districts, and made a tour of inspection of the merits of the various sites that he inspected. The Government was defeated before he had his conclusions prepared, and they were not submitted to the House until Mr. Watson had assumed power. Nevertheless Sir John For-members, and will be treated as such by his successor.

Mr. J. H. G. the member for the Swan has visited Lyndhurst and has again prepared a report upon the result of his observations. He has been very much disappointed, and he summed up strongly in favour of Dalgety. Subsequently, however, he explained that this was not his own opinion, but that it was the claims of Lyndhurst. It is now his intention to ask the present Home Minister to refer the question to a committee of experts as a supplementary to his first minute and of the same weight. Sir John considers that this is a reasonable request and to see whether it will be granted.

It is a very curious circumstance that a speedy selection of a site might not be determined by a coalition with Victorian members. The Government have not yet decided. The Government has no apprehensions. Sir John Fortescue is admissible and almost imperative. He remarks that the site for the future capital should be fix as soon as possible. I do not think, however, that any real progress has been made. It is very broadly the various issues have been more or less

COMMENTS ON THE SITUATION.

LONDON, May 9.

There is nothing very promising from a Russian point of view in the statement which comes as an official notification that General Kuropatkin will remain at Liao-yang for the present.

It faithfully reflects the feelings of the public in this country. The situation is wedded to doubt. In war matters as in diplomacy, Russia appears to have played the game of bluff. In the first instance the Japanese transports would be blown out of the sea. Once the landing took place in Korea, the Russian army would have reached Pishan, and the Japanese would have been on the verge of the northward march. There was not to be the faintest hope of the brown men crossing the Yalu; the strength of the Russian position was represented as impregnable. It was certainly a strong position, but Japan's famous fighting general, Kuroki, completely humiliated the Slav. At the same time, the Russian strength has been reduced to a cruiser squadron, which will have small chance of success against Togo, Hara, Uru, or Kamimura. This brief retrospect invites the query how much longer will the Japanese keep the Russians on the run. The spectacle of gigantic Cosaks of the Amur—a people noted for their huge men—going to the aid of a small, untrained, and ill-equipped force, is hardly a promising one.

It is not the prospect conjured up by the children of the White Bear when the war began. On the contrary, St. Petersburg is swamped with "bluebelly" kartrids, and the Russian army is being retrained by German officers. The Russian army is being retrained by German officers. The Russian army is being retrained by German officers.

When Kuropatkin gets clear of Hai-cheng and Liao-yang he will have a better opportunity of testing his army. He will have a better opportunity of testing his army. He will have a better opportunity of testing his army.

Nowadays it is rather a general term signifying Russian mounted troops. There are several points of view to the Cosack from the aspect of military work. Now it is in the time when they were more than useful. Some critics in this day consider that they have been drilled out of all semblance to the dashing fiery horsemen of earlier days. All that is to be said in praise of them is that they are not so good as they were. They are superior in physique and in horsemanship, and despite any pro-Japanese assurances the weakness of Kodama's army in cavalry is marked. The Japanese, however, evidently possess the qualities of the Cosack, and triumph over deficiencies, which judged from the standards of other nations would suggest complete disaster when the crucial test came. The Continental critics express amazement at the success of the Japanese. These successes have been achieved not only by the heroic efforts of the troops, but also by superior generalship. There was something suggestive prophetic in a telegram which was sent on March 27, in which Admiral Alexieff intimated the appointment of General Kuropatkin as the Vice-Admiral Makarov, and went on: "I recognize that you are my victory will be obliged to transfer your people to a more central position, for example, Harbin." It is probable that the dream that the victorious march of the Japanese would very likely compel the Victory to seek the protection of that point of mobilization. Yet that is what may come to pass. The cable states that Admiral Alexieff was slightly wounded before leaving Port Arthur as a repetition of a similar report of five or six weeks ago. It is hardly likely that on the occasion of two visits to the fortress the Cosack was wounded. When shells are bursting over a fortress rumours of this kind are rife.

Following rapidly upon the succession of defeats, strategic and otherwise, the East, comes the news that the Baltic Fleet will not be sent on its dangerous previously announced mission. It had been assumed that this decision was likely. The recent cancellations of the Baltic Fleet have been cancelled with sufficient evidence in itself. The war is essentially one that will be fought out on land. That was plain from the start, assuming that the rival fleets were at all evenly matched. At the same time, the Japanese warships were immeasurably superior, and to that fact due their remarkably strong position on land, as they were able to put their troops ashore wherever they pleased. The evacuation of Niuchwang was not overestimated in its importance. It indicates that Kuropatkin has not the strength at his disposal that the world has been led to believe. It really means that he is opening a door to one of the strongest positions that the Russians are holding in Manchuria. The country close to the port presented a strategic line to be seized which would have protected Kuropatkin's position at Liao-yang. There is another danger to be feared, and that is that it will be impossible to restrain the Chinese bandits who have been hovering along the line of coast from Shan-shan to Korea. The news of the war during the past week has been sufficiently startling. The Japanese censors have, however, carefully supervised the reports.

CAMPAIGN ITEMS.

"OUR MOST GLORIOUS AUTOCRAT."

A PEASANT'S ANTI-PATRIOTISM.

PRINCE KHILKOFF INTERVIEWED.

The war columns of the English press contain the following reports from St. Petersburg, under date April 4:

A Russian peasant has just sent 200 roubles to the war, accompanied by the following letter:

"To our most glorious autocrat and magnanimous Emperor, Nicholas II, I send you, as a gift, 200 roubles for the war, and I beg you to accept from me, your slave and fisherman Vasilii, 100 roubles for the sick and wounded, or to dispose of as you see best. Accept them, please, from me, your slave and fisherman Vasilii. I am yours absolutely body and soul. The tomb of my life is in the government of Vladimir, district of Bologoye, and today I belong to you, Nicholas Alexandrovich, our grandfather and Czar."

Prince Khilkoff, the Minister of Roads and Communications, has been interviewed on his return from Lake Baikal.

The Prince is a wiry, energetic-looking little man. His actual age is 70, but he would pass anywhere for 60, despite his white hair. His face, clear-shaven save for a tuft on the chin, makes him look more like an American than a Russian.

Prince Khilkoff has been able to inform the Czar, who has just granted him an audience, that the transport of troops over Lake Baikal has up to now been effected without the loss of a single man or a single horse. He admits, however, that he has had good luck on his side.

One occasion a loud and ominous cracking of the ice under a railway wagon full of soldiers threatened a disaster, but fortunately nothing more happened. After this, however, the men always marched across empty by horses, 120 being the greatest number got across in a day.

Guns and gun-carriages were transported in the same way. The second section, divided into two, took the first boiler, then the wheels, and the two sections then crossed separately, 10 horses to each section.

The lines laid across the ice were now being taken up, and the ice-breakers will soon make the lake navigable by the train ferries.

All the material is now across together with the few men who accompanied it. Prince Khilkoff is naturally well satisfied with what he has been able to accomplish, and he has been warmly congratulated by General Kuropatkin. He is returning to Lake Baikal in about 10 days' time.

OPINION IN ENGLAND.

RUSSIA AND CHINA.

LONDON, April 8.

The news from the Far East continues to be very contradictory, and for the moment there is a lull in the interest with which events are followed here from day to day. This may be partly due to the fact that one of the most important little wars in the world is now being fought in the East.

The Russian position is represented as impregnable. It was certainly a strong position, but Japan's famous fighting general, Kuroki, completely humiliated the Slav. At the same time, the Russian strength has been reduced to a cruiser squadron, which will have small chance of success against Togo, Hara, Uru, or Kamimura. This brief retrospect invites the query how much longer will the Japanese keep the Russians on the run. The spectacle of gigantic Cosaks of the Amur—a people noted for their huge men—going to the aid of a small, untrained, and ill-equipped force, is hardly a promising one.

It is not the prospect conjured up by the children of the White Bear when the war began. On the contrary, St. Petersburg is swamped with "bluebelly" kartrids, and the Russian army is being retrained by German officers. The Russian army is being retrained by German officers. The Russian army is being retrained by German officers.

When Kuropatkin gets clear of Hai-cheng and Liao-yang he will have a better opportunity of testing his army. He will have a better opportunity of testing his army. He will have a better opportunity of testing his army.

Nowadays it is rather a general term signifying Russian mounted troops. There are several points of view to the Cosack from the aspect of military work. Now it is in the time when they were more than useful. Some critics in this day consider that they have been drilled out of all semblance to the dashing fiery horsemen of earlier days. All that is to be said in praise of them is that they are not so good as they were. They are superior in physique and in horsemanship, and despite any pro-Japanese assurances the weakness of Kodama's army in cavalry is marked. The Japanese, however, evidently possess the qualities of the Cosack, and triumph over deficiencies, which judged from the standards of other nations would suggest complete disaster when the crucial test came. The Continental critics express amazement at the success of the Japanese. These successes have been achieved not only by the heroic efforts of the troops, but also by superior generalship. There was something suggestive prophetic in a telegram which was sent on March 27, in which Admiral Alexieff intimated the appointment of General Kuropatkin as the Vice-Admiral Makarov, and went on: "I recognize that you are my victory will be obliged to transfer your people to a more central position, for example, Harbin." It is probable that the dream that the victorious march of the Japanese would very likely compel the Victory to seek the protection of that point of mobilization. Yet that is what may come to pass. The cable states that Admiral Alexieff was slightly wounded before leaving Port Arthur as a repetition of a similar report of five or six weeks ago. It is hardly likely that on the occasion of two visits to the fortress the Cosack was wounded. When shells are bursting over a fortress rumours of this kind are rife.

Following rapidly upon the succession of defeats, strategic and otherwise, the East, comes the news that the Baltic Fleet will not be sent on its dangerous previously announced mission. It had been assumed that this decision was likely. The recent cancellations of the Baltic Fleet have been cancelled with sufficient evidence in itself. The war is essentially one that will be fought out on land. That was plain from the start, assuming that the rival fleets were at all evenly matched. At the same time, the Japanese warships were immeasurably superior, and to that fact due their remarkably strong position on land, as they were able to put their troops ashore wherever they pleased. The evacuation of Niuchwang was not overestimated in its importance. It indicates that Kuropatkin has not the strength at his disposal that the world has been led to believe. It really means that he is opening a door to one of the strongest positions that the Russians are holding in Manchuria. The country close to the port presented a strategic line to be seized which would have protected Kuropatkin's position at Liao-yang. There is another danger to be feared, and that is that it will be impossible to restrain the Chinese bandits who have been hovering along the line of coast from Shan-shan to Korea. The news of the war during the past week has been sufficiently startling. The Japanese censors have, however, carefully supervised the reports.
